Laurus Nobilis is a serif fatface type inspired in the Victorian display typefaces of the late 19th and early 20th century with a hint of the contrast of Didot types. While it has only one weight at the moment, its high-contrast features make it a versatile typeface and adequate for headlines and headers.

In the 1970s, everything old was new again, but this time the exaggerated proportions of the era infected the x-heights of many well-trodden styles. Weight was pushed to new extremes. Negative space in and around letters shrank to minuscule specs of white.

Beginning in the (early) 1800s, the Fann Street foundry in London produced a few designs in the brand new genre of “fatfaces.” They were intended for short words to be printed HUG E, and for this purpose, they worked quite well!
